EGYPT-JORDAN: Summit Meeting in Oman

Egyptian President Mubarak and Jordan's King Hussein plan to meet in Oman early next week, and they are likely to focus on ways they can influence the situation in Lebanon--particularly through their relations with the US. [redacted]

25X1

The meeting is being arranged by Oman's Sultan Qaboos. He has been trying to bring about a rapprochement between Egypt and other moderate Arab states. [redacted]

Comment: This will be Mubarak's first meeting with Hussein since taking office. It is also the highest level contact between the two countries since most Arab states severed relations with Egypt in 1979 because of the peace treaty with Israel. The two leaders have exchanged messages in recent months about regional events, and there have been frequent contacts at lower levels. [redacted]

Hussein probably remains wary of Jordan's being the first Arab state to resume full diplomatic ties with Egypt. He clearly is interested, however, in pursuing a closer relationship. [redacted]
